Democratic Income Tax Schedule Put In Revenue Bill

WASHINGTON, May 6. — (By the Associated Press) — Senate organization Republicans agreed at a conference today to seek a compromise on the Democratic income tax schedule in the revenue bill, yesterday at a maximum rate of 32 per cent and if this falls to 27 per cent, 1-2 per cent, the house schedule.

The position of the president on the revenue measure was decided at the White House today to be substantially unchanged, namely firm adherence to the Mellon plan without compromise of its essential provisions. Inquiry as to whether the senate changes might lead the president to veto the bill brought the reply that Mr. Coolidge did not feel that an announcement of executive action should be made until a bill is before him for consideration in its entirety.

Any announcement would be particularly inopportune at the present time in the president's belief in the possibility that the measure may yet undergo considerable change not only in the senate but in conference.

HIS BROTHER'S WIFE

by RUDY AYRES
© NEA SERVICE

BEGIN HERE TODAY

The marriage of Dolly and Nigel Bretherton proves an unhappy one. When war is declared, Nigel is glad to enlist. He leaves Dolly under the care of Mary Furnival. Nigel is killed and Dolly marries an old sweetheart, Robert Durham.

Dolly and Robert sail for America and word comes of the sinking of their ship. When Nigel's brother, David, comes to see Nigel's widow, Mary is ashamed to tell him of Dolly's marriage. David mistakes Mary for his brother's wife and asks her to come to live at Red Grange with him and his aunt. Mary is given a hearty welcome to her new home by David and his aunt, Miss Varney. David shows Mary over the grounds of Red Grange. Mary likes the place.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
David followed at once. He talked trivialities until they were back again in the house.

Mary escaped to her own room then. She was afraid of David; his new friendliness toward her made her afraid. Something in the steady kindness of his eyes seemed to pierce the mean little deceptions of her heart, and leave her ashamed.

"But it's not as if I were trying to get anything for myself," she argued with her conscience. "I only want to be here in Nigel's home for a little while, for just a few days. I will be quite willing to go away then."

She tried to comfort herself with this assurance; but she felt miserable as she went down to lunch.

It seemed as if everyone must know, as if the servants knew that she was an impostor; even the eyes of the faded portraits that lined the room seemed to be looking their contempt and condemnation at her; she could not bear to meet their cold, steady gaze.

She was aroused from her thoughts to the sound of David's voice; he was speaking to Miss Varney.

"I heard from Monty Fisher this morning. Aunt Florence, I wish you would write to Miss Fisher and let her both down here a week-end. He turned to Mary. 'Have you ever met Fisher?'"

Mary tried to find her voice, but it seemed to die away in her throat; she moistened her lips nervously.

After a moment:

"You mean Mr. Fisher, the solicitor?" she faltered.

"Yes; he is my best friend. He used to see to all Nigel's affairs for him."

"I have met him—yes."

"A very nice young man," said Miss Varney. "A great favorite of mine. I will certainly ask him down."

Mary felt as if she must burst out laughing.

What an short-lived paradise hers was to be, after all. She knew that Fisher would recognize her at once—know that she could hope for nothing more once he saw her there installed as Nigel's widow.

A desperate idea of appealing to David not to ask them to care for her mind. But what reason could she give? It would only arouse his suspicion at once; and, besides, if Fisher were his best friend, how could she hope that her secret would be kept?

David was speaking to her.

"Have you met Miss Fisher, too?"

"No—oh, no—no, I haven't."

"I don't think Mary would care for her at all," Miss Varney interposed decidedly. "She isn't in the least like her brother. I can't tolerate dressed-up dolls!" David laughed.

"Oh, come, dear, she isn't as bad as that. And Monty, thinks the world of her."

Miss Varney said "Humph!" She looked at Mary, and shook her head.

"You wait till you see her," she admonished, "and then tell me who is right, David or I?"

Mary did not answer. When lunch was ended, and David rose to leave the room, she made some excuse and followed.

The desperate idea of appealing to him was still lingering in her mind. He had been so kind to her that morning—surely if she asked him not to invite the Fishers down for the present—But what excuse could she give? What reason that would be adequate?

She stopped outside the diningroom door with a feeling of utter defeat. David, hearing her steps, turned. He came back a little.

"Do you want me?"

"No, only—"

He hesitated, then came wholly back.

"Would you like to go out? There is the car. I shall be only too delighted if you would like the restlessness in his eyes. Some new feeling of chivalry in his heart made him long to help her and comfort her. He had never before met a woman who so appealed to him as this one.

"If it wouldn't be bothering you," she told him. "But I am afraid it would be."

"Consent! Run away and put your bonnet on."

She laughed outright at that.

"I don't wear a bonnet—yet."

"Don't you? I'm sorry." He laughed with her. "Hat, then—is that better?"

CHAPTER XXVII.

A Respite.

He stood looking after her as she ran up the stairs. When she came down again he was waiting in the hall. He wore a big coat and a soft hat; a fur-lined cloak hung over his arm.

"This is for you," he said, seeing her glance at it. "It's cold motoring even on a warm day, and the wind is chilly this afternoon." He wrapped it round her, laughing when he saw how much too large it was for her slim figure.

"It's beautifully warm," she told him.

Miss Varney came to the door to see "Be very careful now," she admonished David. "No accidents."

She looked at Mary.

"I never will go out in the car myself," she said. "And I'm always in dread that something will happen to David. You are, I know, you're not a reckless driver, my dear—as he ven-tured to protest. But it's the other people on the road who are reckless. Don't you let him drive too fast, Mary."

The car started smoothly away. Mary leaned back in the cushioned seat beside David, and gave herself up to the enjoyment of the moment. She would not think of anything unpleasant; she determinedly thrust all shadows of the future behind her.

"Are you enjoying it?" asked David. He looked down at her smilingly.

"I think it's lovely. I've never been in such a big car before."

"I'll teach you to drive some day. If you would ever learn. It's quite easy when you know how."

"I don't believe I could ever learn." "Nonsense!" He moved a little nearer to her, pointing out the various brakes and handles.

"When we get into a quieter road we will change places, and you shall try."

She assented eagerly. About half a mile further along he stopped.

"Now you take my seat."

He sat with one arm behind her, his hand on the wheel, ready to control it; he showed her how to use the electric starter. Mary gave a little excited cry when she felt the car moving forward under her control. David laughed at her.

SHE LOOKED STRAIGHT AHEAD DOWN THE LITTLE QUIET ROAD.

"I can't allow you to drive through the village," he said. "Besides, you haven't got a license. We shall have the police after us." He leaned across them and tucked the rug warmly round her; there was something so intimate and friendly in the little action as if she had known him all her life.

Once again the desire came to her to speak about the Fishers. She stole a shy glance at him; he was looking at her.

"Well?" he encouraged.

She sat up suddenly.

"I wonder if you would think it very strange if I were to ask you something?"

"You look like a child with a new toy," he said. "Turn the wheel a little more to the left—we're too much at the side of the road."

Her eyes were bright and her cheeks flushed when he turned her back to her own seat.

She was surprised at her own daring and the steadiness of her voice. "Try me and see," he suggested.

She looked straight ahead of her down the little quiet road, with its handful of cottages and tiny shops. "It's only—only—I wonder if you would mind very much if I asked you not to—to invite Mr. Fisher down here just yet?"

She caught her breath. Beneath the fur rug her hands were clasped together tightly.

David did not answer for a moment. "You don't like him?" he hazarded then.

She shook her head vigorously.

"Oh, no—no, it isn't that! He has always been very nice to me. But if you don't mind very much—Just while I am here. Oh, I know it sounds dreadful of me to ask such a thing."

"What do you mean—just while you are here?" he questioned.

She did not look at him.

"Because I shan't be here long, of course; only for a little while. I couldn't stay here very long; it wouldn't be right."

"Why not right?"

"Why indeed? Her heart echoed the question mockingly.

"Because," she said faintly, "oh, because—" And then stopped again.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Mary's Request.

There was a little silence. They had left the village behind them now, and were out again on the high road, between broad hedgerows.

"They shall not come if you don't wish it," said David presently. "I will tell my aunt."

But now she had got her own way she was frightened.

"Oh, I don't want you to put them off because of me! They are your friends; it can be no concern of mine if they come." She was breathless and agitated. "Oh, I hope you are not offended!" she pleaded.

He smiled.

"It takes more than that to offend me. I am glad you asked me to put them off; it shows that you don't feel as if I am quite a stranger. I am very glad."

When he spoke again, it was entirely irrelevant.

"When will you have your next driving lesson?"

Fugitive Suspect Shot In Gun Battle With Detectives

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 6.—Seriously wounded in a gun battle with local detectives Monday, a man, identified as Joe Urbaytis, 25, of Toledo, sought his escape from the Lucas county jail at Toledo, Labor Day, 1921, after his conviction for participation in the million-dollar postoffice robbery at Toledo, Feb. 17, 1921, is under heavy guard in a local hospital.

While the wounded man declares he is Alfred Walton, of Boston, Mass., police say he answers Bertillon description of Joe Urbaytis. He also was identified as Joe Urbaytis by Stuart R. Ball, Columbus, who presented the government's case against the bandits in federal court at Toledo.

Two other men, one identified as Frank Urbaytis, brother of Joe and Chester Franks, also of Toledo, are held by police.

Last week police received a tip that bandits were making headquarters in a rooming house here. Detectives immediately were assigned to trace them. Frank was picked up Saturday evening. Today detectives Harry Carson and

Palmer Anderson raided the house. They found the Urbaytis brothers in a room with two women. While attempting to question them Joe ran, drawing his revolver. When Carson started after him he opened fire. In the battle Urbaytis was shot twice, one bullet entering his abdomen and the other his hip. Hospital attendants tonight said his condition was "fair."

Neither of the Urbaytis brothers or Franks will discuss the Toledo robbery, captain of Detectives McNeal said today. Officers from Toledo are said to be enroute here. They are expected to make positive identification and may return Frank Urbaytis to Toledo, where he is wanted for jumping bond.

All of the bandits who participated in the postoffice robbery with the exception of Joe Urbaytis are serving sentences in federal penitentiaries. All but approximately $50,000 of the million dollars worth of cash and bonds taken has been recovered. This amount is said by officials to have been Joe Urbaytis' share.

American Business Awaiting Expression of Gov't. Policies

CLEVELAND, O., May 6.—(By the A. P.)—American business is halting, awaiting a renewed expression of governmental policies. Julius H. Barnes, Duluth, Minn., president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and spokesman for three quarters of a million affiliated members, said tonight in outlining the aims and ideals of the organization on the eve of the first general session of the 12th annual convention. He urged a vigorous redefinition of the nation to the traditional American policy of competitive private enterprise, unhampered by unintelligent directed governmental influences.

The address concluded the preliminary session of the convention, in which the national council, composed of representatives of some 1300 affiliated commercial organizations, expressed almost unanimous opposition to the pending soldier bonus bill, and approved the program for the general sessions which are scheduled to begin tomorrow morning.

Consider Varied Problems
Taxation, transportation, immigration, foreign trade, as influenced by the Dawes' report, and various problems of industry, are scheduled for consideration in group meetings during the next four days. A successor to President Barnes will be selected by the new board of directors Thursday.

The council refused to submit a national referendum to the chamber on a proposition of adoption of the metric unit system as the American standard.

A resolution urging the chamber to go on record as opposed to the direct primary system, was withdrawn after the sentiment was revealed by discussion that the meeting should refrain from action on purely political questions.

Praise Home Building
Eulogizing American business for its contribution to better homes, finer schools, and the ever increasing effectiveness of humanitarian institutions, made possible by the increasing material prosperity of the national life, Mr. Barnes urged his audience to visualize the human aspects of industry in forming judgments on the advisability of new relationships between government and business.

"The major requirement in our increasing complexity of living and the increasing intricacy of industry," he said, "is that government shall intelligently understand and sympathetically approach the problems of commerce."

Urges Taxation Settlement
He urged immediate settlement of the question of national taxation, ascribing to the general uncertainty in this matter a large measure of the responsibility for the present tendency toward retrenchment in business.

Attempt to Abolish Labor Board Starts
Lively Row In House

WASHINGTON, May 6.—A bitter fight which developed Monday over Barker's bill to abolish the railroad labor board kept the house in session until nearly midnight. In the end Democrats and Republican insurgents, routing the Republican organization succeeding in having debate on the measure limited to three hours.

During the session, which lasted nearly 12 hours without a break, Republican leaders, resorting to filibuster tactics, vainly attempted to stave off house consideration of the measure. Much of the time was taken up with 18 roll calls each consuming half an hour.

White Shriners Plan Educational Fund; Club Officers Named

CLEVELAND, O., May 6.—A proposal for an educational endowment fund will be presented to the supreme shrine of the White Shrine of Jerusalem which opened a four day convention here tonight with a banquet attended by delegates from all parts of the United States and Canada.

The proposal, which is expected will be presented Wednesday by Mrs. Daisy F. Davis, Chicago, supreme worthy high priestess, would provide scholarships for young men and women, preferably sons and daughters of Masons, who will enter the ministry or mission field.

Subordinate shrines of Michigan have petitioned the supreme shrine for a state shrine. Officers said today such proposals heretofore have been voted down, as the organization, with 11,000 members, is not large enough for state sub divisions.

Relief Is Sought by North Moreland Residents; Health Board Holds Meeting

Co-operation of members of Hempstead Academy was urged, at a meeting of the City Board of Health, Monday afternoon, in the matter of the health of restaurant employees who are afflicted with communicable diseases.

The matter was brought to the attention of the Board by the Bureau of Community Service, through its director, Miss Blanche H. Lowe, who urged that all employees of restaurants, groceries, meat markets, and other places where food is handled, be required to obtain certificates of a physician as to their freedom from communicable diseases.

Edmund James, inspector for the state dairy and food department, stated to the Board that after investigation, of local conditions, he found that sixty per cent of the employees of such business houses in Portsmouth, were in possession of proper license.

North Moreland Discussed
After discussion, a report on conditions in North Moreland by health officials, was referred to council for action. The report is as follows:

May 5, 1924.
To the Honorable Board of Health, Portsmouth, Ohio.
Gentlemen:—

We desire to call the attention of the Board to the insanitary condition existing in the North Moreland Addition to the City, which is located north of the village of New Boston.

At the time this addition was taken into the City, many homes were draining their wastes into Munn's Run, thereby making that stream a "sanitary sewer."

This is fast becoming a menace to the health of the people living in that vicinity. With very few exceptions, it is next to impossible to dig vaults there and this department has refused to permit the further pollution of this stream.

We believe that to give relief to the citizens of this vicinity, a conference should be held by the proper committee of Council, the Council of the village of New Boston, the County Board of Health, and this Board, the Engineer of both the City of Portsmouth and the village of New Boston to the end that this plan may be worked out to relieve this situation. Respectfully yours,

O. D. TATJE, Health Commissioner.

W. WEST, Plumbing Inspector.

The schedule, amounting to $23.66 was approved.

Plumbing Inspector West submitted the following report:

The following is a summary of the work performed by the Plumbing Inspector during the month of April, 1924:

Old buildings connected to the sewer—13.

New buildings connected to the sewer—18.

Number of first inspections—50.

Number of final inspections—12.

Miscellaneous inspections—73.

Total inspections—175.

Number of complaints investigated—81.

Permits issued—50.

Total receipts for the month—$901.25.

I have also successfully prosecuted one person for maintaining a nuisance on his premises.

Respectfully submitted,
Wm. WEST, Plumbing Inspector.

Brace Up Fat Men, Here Is Cheering News

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Fat men stand the heat better than lean ones, the bureau of mines has established through experiments in the especially constructed chamber at Pittsburgh.

The fat men, the bureau found, last more weight when subjected to uncomfortably hot temperatures, but they were less exhausted when they were removed in a state of rest and in still air the experiments disclosed, the human body cannot endure indefinitely a temperature higher than 90 degrees Fahrenheit with 100 per cent relative humidity.

Pulse rate, rather than rise in bodily temperature, it was discovered, apparently determines the extent of discomfort in high temperatures. Subjects become very uncomfortable, when the pulse reached 135 pulsations a minute, and unbearable symptoms appeared at 160. The highest pulse rate recorded was 181.

Methodists Fire Hot Protest At Butler's Speech

NEW YORK, May 6.—Characterizing Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's speech before the Missouri Society as "beneath the dignity of the president of a great University," the Methodist Ministerial association today resolved to make formal protest to the board of trustees of Columbia University.

The resolution of protest, unanimously favored by 150 ministers attending the association's meeting, described Dr. Butler's attitude as "not the right kind of patriotic example to set before thousands of young men and women training for citizenship at Columbia University."

Dr. Butler's statements that it was impossible to enforce the prohibition laws were denounced as "radical, superficial and unfounded." Criticisms and commendations of Dr. Butler's speech have been received by him from numerous sources. The parents of some students at Columbia University have protested and threatened to have their children leave the university unless Dr. Butler retracts his remarks.

When Love Destroys

As long as he lives, that mad drive of death will remain burned on his memory. Never will he forget that shriek of fear from the destroyer of his home as the car hurtled toward the quarry's unprotected brink. Always he will see in the eyes of the woman he called wife, the terror of a doom she knew was sealed.

Little had she realized that a dinner of herbs is better than the richest banquet paid for in sin. In her foolish ignorance and inexperience—she went her way blindly—courting destruction to her soul.

"When a Man Loves," in True Story Magazine for June, is the story of a girl whose ignorance and love of gaiety brought tragedy. It hammers home in an unforgettable way, the truth about problems that face all of us.

By exposing the temptations and pitfalls of life True Story fills a need not met by any other magazine. By telling the truth fearlessly and honestly, it has furthered and will continue to further the health, happiness and moral progress of millions of lives.

No matter who you are or where you live, you will find True Story Magazine a rich storehouse of wisdom, taken directly from the whirlpool of life itself. Its stories are an inspiration and encouragement to the fallen, as well as to all others. It is a tremendous power of moral uplift and good.

'RING' CONTROLS VETERANS' BUREAU, SAYS SENATOR ODDIE, SEEKING OFFICIAL SCALPS

WASHINGTON, May 6.—(By the A. P.)—Existence in the veterans' bureau of a "ring" which controls its policies and operations was charged in the senate yesterday by Senator Oddie, Republican, Nevada, who declared "all the laws in the mind of man" would not make the bureau function properly so long as the present control continued.

The Nevada senator asserted that the six assistant directors now in the bureau should be "ousted forthwith," and that similar action should be taken in the cases of "every official brought over from the war risk insurance bureau."

He declared appropriations made for veterans relief had been "squandered and misapplied" and that the bureau operated under a policy which "prejudged a majority of ex-service men to be dishonest."

Committee Counsel Rapped
Senator Oddie, who is a member of the special senate committee appointed to investigate the administration of Director Charles Forbes, criticized the manner in which Major General John F. O'Day, the committee counsel, had directed the inquiry. Three months before it began, he said Brigadier General Frank T. Hines, the present director, was given a complete set of the questions which would be asked.

"Officials of the bureau were thus able to prepare answers for the committee," he said.
The desirability of ousting the assistant directors and "other officials in key positions," had been presented to Director Hines, the Nevada senator said, but added that "that official is under the influence of the ring."

Under "Ring Influence"
The president is very anxious that the bureau shall function properly, he said, "but he is advised by the director that everything is proceeding satisfactorily, and the director is under the influence of this ring."

Senator Oddie said he had drawn a "plan of reorganization," but had not had an opportunity to submit it to the committee.

Miss Dolly Wise

She is here to answer any and all questions concerning love, matrimony, troubles, woes, etiquette, etc. Inquiries should be addressed to Miss Dolly Wise, care The Daily Times, Portsmouth, Ohio.

Dear Dolly—I saw in this column the other night where someone suggested that Ironton and Portsmouth go together and have a park half-way between the two cities, and to show you and everybody else concerned that my heart is in the right place, I would like to suggest a couple of suitable names. I don't want them to hold up the whole works for want of a name, so here are my suggestions: "Midway Park." How's that for a park half-way between the two cities? Pretty clever, eh, Dolly? "The Community Park." Not so clever, but suitable, in case they want to use it. "The Port Park." "The Central Park." or "The Park City Park." I may think up some more names by the time they get the park started. And listen, Dolly, tell them to get a roller coaster, and a figure eight, a merry-go-round, and a lot of other things. Here's hoping that we get a park some day and that they will call it "The Midway," which, I think, is the most appropriate name among those you suggested.

Dear Dolly—I have a good job and I don't want to leave it, but my brother is sick and he wants me to come to him. My people want me to stay here and I want to do both. Dolly, please tell me what to do. I don't want to make anyone mad.

UNHAPPY SISTER.

If your brother is dangerously ill and needs you, I think you should go to him. You will never forgive yourself if he passes on without seeing you. I should think you could arrange to get off for a few days or weeks, and do what you can for him. There will be jobs long after you and your brother have gone to your final resting place, and if your employer should go away and get another position when you come back.

Dear Dolly—I am 16 years of age and have been going with a man of 20. He is real nice looking and I love him with respect, but I have found out that he steps out with other girls when he does not have a date with me. Dolly, we are engaged, and I do not think he has a right to go with anyone else. I am true to him and I expect him to be true to me. He is so kind to me that I cannot help liking him. Do you think he cares anything for me? Please give me your advice.

WANT-TO-KNOW.

I suppose he has the same feeling for you that he has for all nice little girls, but I am sure that he does not love you seriously. If he has ever mentioned marriage to you, he was probably joking with you, as you are not old enough to know the meaning of the word. I don't know what your parents mean by letting you keep steady company or become engaged.

Dear Dolly—I am 16 years of age and I want to know if I am too young to go with the boys. My father does not consent to this, but my mother seems to care more for me and she treats me better than my father. I have two sisters and he treats them better than he does me. What can I do to make him treat me the same? Dolly, I am going with a boy about my age and he seems to like me, but he is always with some other girl when he is not with me. How can I stop him from going with other girls?

WORRIED BLUE EYES.

You might lock him up, or tie him to the door knob. Your father will like you better if you do not disobey him. If you are stubborn and disobedient, no one will love you, not even the boy you are crazy about.

Suggests Using Park
As a Tourist Camp

In a communication to Chairman Mark W. Selby of the City Park Commission, Manager Adm. Frick of the Chamber of Commerce, suggests the use of York Park as a tourist camp. In his letter he says: "There has been frequent inquiries for parking privileges for the tourists coming through the city and it has been suggested that perhaps there might be an arrangement made enabling York Park to be used for this emergency purpose. It occurred to me that this would be a very splendid use for this Park and serve a very splendid purpose for the tourists."

"We merely submit this suggestion that you might give it consideration and if the committee could work out some arrangement that would enable two, three or perhaps a dozen machines to be parked there during the night season, we are quite sure that it would be a service very highly appreciated. Located as it is on the banks of the Ohio, with the shade now coming up on the ground, would make a situation that could hardly be equaled anywhere for scenic beauty and convenience."

THE TWINS VISIT MR. GULLIVER

"I soon discovered that I was tied down."

"We have seen so many people in Once-Upon-A-Time Land, that there are not many left to visit," said Miss Alice. "A hundred tiny baskets full of me. I have three legs of lamb the bigger than that at one mouthful, and three loaves of bread and three of their lumps I swallowed without as much as a hiccup. They thought I never would get filled, I know."

"Everything that I did seemed to astonish them."

"Then they gave me something to drink which put me to sleep."

"While I was asleep, fifteen hundred of their horses carried me to the king's palace."

"The king ordered nine hundred towns to feed me, three hundred tailors to make me a suit of clothes, and it took six hundred of their beds to make a bed for me."

"One day they had a parade of a hundred thousand men and ten thousand horses. I stood up and my legs made a great archway under which they passed."

"Is that all?" asked Nick.

"Not quite," said Mister Gulliver. "They want to war with their enemies, the Blebbians, over the right way to open an egg. I went out into the open and picked up all the eggs for them, so they won. After that the king and I had to leave the Land of the Lilliputians."

Soft and cool for a warm day and delightfully fresh even after many washings would be a dress developed in one of the new tub silks. The Fashion has three particularly smart designs. I fell in love with a gay orange and white striped little dress with the oddest pockets, the one on the blouse choosing to perch over the wearer's heart, while the one on the skirt was just where it was most easily reached by the right hand searching for a "banky" or pocket puff. They are Mme. Renauld dresses designed for women less than 5 feet 5 inches tall.

German Party Coalition Will Guarantee Terms Of Reparations, Belief

BERLIN, May 6.—Unless an official record of the battles of the United Socialist party of its present rank as numerically the strongest part in the Reichstag, President Hindenburg will in the next few days, consider its leaders to proceed with the work of organizing a new coalition government.

In that event the Socialists will either promptly reject the assignment for summer the leaders of the Clerical, the German People's and the Democratic parties to discuss the formation of a big coalition, which on the basis of the present returns would definitely control 229 mandates out of 363.

Only 180 of the opposition voters, contributed by the Nationalists, Communists and Lutheran party can be classified as a fixed oppositional factor. The remaining 39 votes are distributed among the Bavarian People's party and half a dozen minor political factions which are making their first appearance in the Reichstag. This is the parliamentary situation awaiting the coalition, composed of the Socialists and the three middle parties, which complete voting strength would, ordinarily insure it a safe working majority.

The only other alternative from Sunday's elections is suggested in the formation of a straight bourgeois ministry comprising the German Nationalists, the People's party, the Clericals, the Bavarian People's party and the Democrats. Its prospect of being realized is considered very remote by the parliamentary leaders, who profess to see in the formation of a big coalition headed by the Socialists the only reliable guarantee for prompt and faithful fulfillment of the conditions prescribed in the experts' report.

Let It Ring From The Housetops Says Old Portsmouth Citizen

J. E. Young, who is now at Fisher and Streich's Pharmacy, Sixth and Chillicothe Sts., introducing his Medicine, Peppen, makes interesting statement regarding use of famous medical discovery.

"Every one is asking me about this Peppen," said Mr. Phil M. Streich, today to a representative of The Portsmouth Times. "I have never had a remedy in my store which gives such universal satisfaction. It is a real pleasure to be able to offer the people such an excellent remedy for stomach, liver and kidney ailments. Peppen is sold upon an absolute money back guarantee. Over six thousand bottles of Peppen have been sold since we first secured the Peppen agency of this number but four have been returned."

The endorsement of Peppen recently given by Mr. J. P. Dimin, of 1622 Market Road, is typical of that of many others. Mr. Dimin is now over sixty years of age and has lived in Portsmouth practically all of his life.

"I have never found any medicine that would do me the good that Peppen has done," said Mr. Dimin. "You can tell everybody in Portsmouth that I say it is fine. Tell them any way you want, shout it from the housetops," he continued.

"About a month ago I got to feeling 'sore' bad that I thought I would have to give up my work at The Breece Manufacturing Co. I had been feeling tired and worn out all winter. Nearly everything I ate would lay in my stomach and sour. A gas would blow me up and a sour liquid would rise in my mouth, choking me. I tried very easily and when night would come I would be completely exhausted. I kept hearing about and reading about this Peppen, that is being introduced at Fisher and Streich's."

"So I got some Peppen and started taking it three times a day before my meals. My appetite began to improve at once. I found I could eat a good meal without having those attacks of gas and bloating. I am now on my fourth or fifth bottle and I am in good shape. My nerves are steady now. My sleep is sound and I get up in the morning with a clear head, thoroughly rested and ready for a day's work. My recovery was due to Peppen and you can tell everybody who wants to know about it to come to see me."

In remarking about this case, Mr. Young said, "There is no reason why every person in Portsmouth who is troubled as Mr. Dimin was cannot secure the same relief. Given a fair trial I feel sure that Peppen will relieve the most obstinate cases of stomach, liver or kidney trouble. Peppen is a compound of many pure roots and herbs, so commended as to stimulate the glands of these vital organs so that they will again function as intended originally by nature."

CAUTION: The GENUINE PEPPEN is packed in a white and blue carton and may be obtained in Portsmouth at Fisher and Streich's Pharmacy; Kelso's Pharmacy, New Boston. There is a Peppen store in every nearby town.—advertisement.

Women Assert They Have Earned Right On Church Boards

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May 6.—The Methodist Episcopal board of bishops will take official notice of the three students who reported at the general conference today on behalf of the national students' convention at Louisville, Ky. It was voted that the bishops should frame a suitable reply to the young men who urged their elders to forward the ideals of world peace and to effect unification of the North and South churches.

The finalization of the church boards was proposed in a resolution from the southwest Kansas delegation, who declared that women had earned a right to a voice in the reaching of important decisions. The resolution declared that women had "given full proof of their ability to plan wisely and administer funds economically and advantageously."

Billy Evans Says

Do the duties of managing a major league club take something out of the player?

Minor league bench managers are convinced that the directing of a big league team is a job in itself.

They seem to be a unit in the belief that the star player, unless he is a decided exception to the rule, will slump in his work as a result of big league managerial duties.

"The mental side of managing a major league club takes far more out of the player-manager than the physical part of it," remarked a famous bench manager to me recently in discussing the question.

"The leader of a big league ball club has much to worry about from the time the season opens until it closes. Playing, in addition to managing, is a task few are equal to."

"Aside from directing the play of the club, the manager must promote harmony, engender the fighting spirit, maintain discipline and yet be able to have all his players pulling for him. Quite a job."

"He must do those things if he is to be successful."

It is almost obvious, that the bench manager is in much better position to do such things than the player-leader, who must not only direct but also deliver.

There are in the two major leagues today several star players who are combining the playing and managerial end for the first time.

George Sisler, outstanding star of the game, after a year's absence because of eye trouble, is playing first and handling the St. Louis Browns.

Despite a very disappointing start by his club, Sisler seems to have recovered the form that made him the most talked about player in the country.

It will be interesting to note what effect the showing of his club may eventually have on the play of Sisler.

A manager of a ball club is held accountable for its showing, although very often he is in no way responsible for the failure of the club to win.

If the Browns continue to disappoint, will Sisler be able to continue his remarkable play? If he does he will be more than the super-player he is recognized to be.

In addition to Sisler there is Stanley Harris of the Washington team and Dave Bancroft of the Boston Braves. Bancroft goes from a pennant winner and world champion to a lowly second division club. The whole situation will be new to him. Harris, one of the game's greatest second basemen, is in charge of a club that finished fourth last season.

What will the harvest be for these stars in the role of managers?

Langley Trial Called Today At Covington

COVINGTON, KY., May 6.—Charged by indictment with conspiracy to defraud the United States government in connection with a whiskey transaction in Sept., 1912, Congressman John W. Langley, Kentucky, goes on trial in federal court here tomorrow.

Langley with four others was indicted April 7 on charges of removing 1400 cases of whiskey from the Belle of Anderson distillery near Lawrenceburg, Ky., on an unauthorized permit. The whiskey was withdrawn ostensibly for medical purposes, the indictment charged but was sold for beverage purposes causing the government a loss of $17,610 in taxes. Those named with Langley are: M. E. Huth, Alliance, Ohio; Walter B. Carey, Canton, Ohio; Milton Lipschutz, New York and Albert F. Slater, Philadelphia.

Langley is specifically charged with having received $2,000 to use his influence with Prohibition Director Sam Collins of Kentucky to induce him to authorize the withdrawal of the whiskey, which federal officers allege Collins refused to do.

McAdoo Put Over In Texas By Klan, Says Underwood Man

DALLAS, TEXAS, May 6.—On the eve of the Democratic county conventions in Texas today, which will select delegates to the state convention at Waco May 27, the strength of William G. McAdoo, candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination in the precinct meeting last Saturday was ascribed to the support of the Ku Klux Klan, in a statement issued today by W. L. Lee, Texas manager for Senator Oscar W. Underwood.

When shown the statement, Carlo Sells, state manager for McAdoo branded it as "an absurd bugaboo."

An honest campaign, fairly and openly conducted in attempt to wake Texans from the stupefying effects of Ku Kluxism may have failed," Mr. Lee said. "But that question is yet to be determined tomorrow in the county conventions and on May 27 at the state convention at Waco."

Davis Against Plan To Endorse Candidates

COLUMBUS, O., May 6.—Former Governor Harry L. Davis, Cleveland, in a statement today declared "unqualified protest and opposition" against a plan to have the state Republican convention officially endorse a candidate for governor.

The former governor said: "Republicans generally should be warned against committing so grave mistake of policy as openly to flout the state primary laws."

The defendants are alleged to have stolen a large number of hams and other meats from a shipment over the New York Central railroad. Both entered pleas of not guilty and were held for grand jury investigation on their bonds of $2500 each. Food was furnished and both were released.

Students On Strike Line Up For Test

DECATUR, Ill., May 6.—Opposing forces in the Milliken student strike braced for what is expected to prove the acid test of the controversy—attendance at regular classes which have been called for tomorrow morning, the first regular session attempted since Friday.

The strike was called after the board of managers had refused to reinstate William Casey and Watson Selbidge, two professors whose contracts were not renewed.

Those who are opposed to the strike profess to see a break in the ranks of the strikers in the formal announcement of a local women's organization that its members would attend classes regularly this morning.

Monday afternoon saw a gradual exodus of students who are leaving for their homes until the difficulty is settled. Classes were called by Acting President A. R. Taylor, but the attendance was scattered.

Marshall Would Not Be President If Job Was 'Handed' to Him

YOUNGSTOWN, O., May 6.—Declaration that he would not be a president "if they handed it to me" was made by Thomas R. Marshall, former vice president of the United States, in an address at the annual banquet of the Youngstown Young Men's Christian association.

"I never knew a president who was happy after he got into the White House," Mr. Marshall said. "The president today, in addition to the duties of office, is expected to be a leader and keep together a great political party. It cannot be done."

Mr. Marshall assailed the preference primary, saying it was never intended by the founders of our government and sooner or later "the people will wake up and get rid of it."

People the world over have adopted this method, because of evident results. Leading dentists of some 50 nations are advising it today.

Fix Value of Land Needed To Enlarge Game Preserve

The land appraisal committee appointed by Director of Agriculture Charles V. Tamm to fix values of certain tracts wanted to add to the Roosevelt Game Preserve, yesterday submitted its report. Value of 13 tracts lying within or adjacent to the state park, on which options have been allowed to expire because prices were believed to be excessive, is held by the committee to be $27,225.

According to Chairman Adam Frick, the value thus fixed compares favorably with the option prices, and the state is expected to proceed at once with acquisition of the land. According to State Auditor Joseph Tracy $100,000 is available for expansion of the tract and will be spent if the land is offered at a reasonable price.

Trinity Board Decides To Go Ahead with Community House

Decision to go ahead with the erection of a modern church, community house and installation of a new pipe organ featured a supper meeting of the Official Board of Trinity church last night.

Plans decided upon last night call for an expenditure of $85,000, and work on the improvements is to begin next March, following a financial campaign to be staged this fall. Rev. Walter H. Smith presided over the session held last evening when about 75 men and women of the church and Sunday School were in attendance.

Construction of the community house will be of brick to match the church structure, it was decided, the building will be on the Sellards tract, acquired for the purpose some time ago, immediately north of the main church property at Gallia and Offshore streets.

Complete departmentalization of the Sunday School will result when the new project is completed, as facilities are planned for primary, junior, intermediate and senior departments. School facilities will also be encouraged, and a combination gymnasium and banquet hall is included in preliminary plans. A boys' scout room and ladies' parlor are projected.

The gymnasium will measure approximately 48x70 feet, with a 22 foot ceiling clearance, according to a committee of 15 at last night's session. James Breese is chairman of this committee.

The Ladies Aid Society appropriated $14,000 for the community organ and community building project. Details of the project are left in the hands of financial and building committees, which the meeting last night authorized Rev. Smith to name. Rev. Smith is already chairman of a pipe organ committee.

Enthusiasm of last night's session was reflected by unanimous consent to the combined projects.

Good Will Trading Tours Planned by Local Merchants

Invasion of the trading territory, planned by local business men, was planned at a well attended meeting of the Portsmouth Retail Merchants' Association last night. ## "Mothers Day"

(By The Associated Press)
COLUMBUS, O., May 6.—Sunday, May 11, was officially proclaimed as Mothers' Day by Governor Donahoe today.

The proclamation urged all to pay "our love, homage and devotion" at our respective shrines, "to her who gave us birth, nurtured and reared us and loves us as only a mother can."

The governor asked that flowers be the "token of reverence and devotion for those who have passed to the other side," and also the symbol to the living of our respect and enduring affections.

"Old Dad," whom the governor declares, "is too frequently forgotten," should also be included in the tribute to mother as a means of carrying out the Biblical injunction to "honor thy father and thy mother," the proclamation said.

"It has long been the custom to set aside a day each year for special observance by those of mother. With this purpose in mind and by virtue of the authority vested in me, as governor of Ohio, I do hereby name Sunday, May 11, 1924, as Mothers' day and urge that at our respective shrines of worship we pay our love and devotion to her who gave us birth, nurtured and reared us and loved us as only mothers can. "The character of this nation emanates from the souls of its mothers who incubate in children influences that mould the destinies of our people and safeguard the perpetuity of our country's institutions. We, the beneficiaries of the sacrifices of her, who offered her life for us, owe to her our virtues and worthy achievements."

"Let flowers be the token of reverence and devotion for those who have passed to the other side. Let flowers also be the symbol to the living of our respect and enduring affection. But let us also when time has dealt sparingly with mother in the material things of life, supplement our flowers with check or bank note that burdens may be lightened and the heart made to feel that there is, after all, real appreciation for the mothers of men."

"The people throughout our commonwealth should avail themselves of Mothers' Day to glorify those for whom the day is set aside. And, upon this day of filial remembrance, let us not forget the Biblical injunction, 'honor thy father and thy mother,' so that in this way we may enlarge the meaning of 'mothers' day by including 'old dad' who is too often forgotten."

Blue Grass Stake Race On Lexington Card Wednesday

LOUISVILLE, KY., May 6.—Dirt followers turned their eyes toward Lexington where the Blue Grass stakes, for three years of age, will be run tomorrow. The Blue Grass stakes is considered by horsemen as a test for Kentucky derby candidates. Upon their showing Wednesday at the track, it will be decided whether the thoroughbreds will be entered in the derby ten days later.

Beau Butler, E. L. Bradley's colt, after his victory over Chilhowee and others in an overnight handicap last week, is considered by racing enthusiasts the logical favorite.

Present indications point to a field of fourteen, including Beau Butler, Chilhowee, Dazzler, Frankman, Dudley, Cloister, King O'Neill II, Corinth, Fire Boy and Balto Brush. They will all carry their derby weight of 126 pounds.

On Trial For Heresy

GALLION, O., May 6.—(By The Associated Press)—Bishop William Montgomery Brown, retired, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who has been sued for heresy for his alleged unorthodox writings and is scheduled to go on trial in Trinity Cathedral in Cleveland, today issued a statement outlining a defense of his heresy charge. The trial will be the first for heresy in the church since the reformation.

Bishop Brown, who relinquished his last diocese ten years ago in Arkansas, has engaged Attorneys Joseph W. Sharts, of Dayton, Ohio, and Edward Bushnell, of Cleveland, as his counsel. "The Level Plan For Church Union" in which he advocated the merging of all Protestant churches, was the original basis of the heresy charge.

Following his retirement from the active ministry, but while he still retained his status as bishop of the church Bishop Brown continued writings described by churchmen as radical and unorthodox, he admits.

The church has never defined heresy, he contends.

Votes Expensive

In Jackson County

The Wellston Sentinel says: Each vote cast in Jackson county in the preferential primary, and there were 100 of them in both parties, cost the taxpayers a fraction over $14 apiece, which is an outrageous expenditure to say the least of it, but in compliance with a foolish law enacted at the urging of a wild-eyed band of reformers who would change the government to carry out a hobby of their own. Just about one voter in 6 exercised the privilege of voting, and primaries for the past ten years, only in a few notable exceptions have the voters shown any appreciable concern for the system. The people should speak out against the extravagant plan.

Who Is The Business Man?

Who if offered 5,000 handbills each 10 inches long and about 4 1-2 inches wide, with the opportunity to put on each bill vital facts about the merchandise he has to sell, would not consider it a bargain if he could get them for say $5. And if he were given the opportunity to pay say $5 more and have all these bills distributed in five thousand homes, would he not feel he was fortunate?

The Morning Sun is distributed each morning to nearly five thousand homes and less than a hundred of these are outside the Portsmouth community trading area. A space such as is designated above may be purchased in an issue of the Sun for as low as $3.60 and each advertisement will go into these almost 5,000 homes where the Sun is now a regular and welcome visitor.

This advertisement is in such a space as is designated above.

"BEWARE OF FLASHLIGHT KING" ROBBER WRITES ON MANTLE AFTER RANSACKING HANDLEY HOME

Police Seek Self-Styled Thief Who Escaped With Much Loot

Beware of "The Flashlight King." This bold self-styled thief, who has been making a name for himself in Portsmouth, Ohio, is the "Flashlight King." He is the man who has been seen in the neighborhood of the Handley home, 1705 Eleventh street, reporting that the "King" was at his home and left his "card" after departing with clothing, jewelry, etc., valued at $300. Written in chalk on the oak mantle Mr. and Mrs. Handley found these words, "The Flashlight King," written in a big bold hand by the thief who completely ransacked their home while they were out of the city on a visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Handley left Friday for a visit in Gloucester, O., and did not return until Monday evening about six o'clock. The back door being opened first attracted their attention and on going into other rooms there was plenty of evidence that the house had been ransacked by a burglar. Drawers were taken out of the bureau, dresser and dressing table and dumped on the beds and bedclothing was pulled back in the search for money.

The only money taken was $15 stolen from a baby's bank which was broken open. Four suits belonging to Mr. Handley, hats, shoes and a dozen shirts, formed part of the loot "carted" away in two suit cases. Jewelry including baby rings, ear rings, necklaces and gold belt buckle was taken with the jewelry box. Toilet water and face powder also are missing.

Realizing that the family was away the burglar evidently took his own sweet time in going through the house for the prepared lunch out of the ice box and "thoroughly enjoyed" himself.

The silver ware was kept in a secret drawer and was not found. A diamond ring Mrs. Handley had put away was not found by the thief.

Neighbors noticed the alley gate open Sunday morning but thought storm of Saturday afternoon had blown it open. This leads Mr. and Mrs. Handley to believe the house was visited Saturday night.

Police were notified last night and found the foot prints near the kitchen window were the same as those found near the Shunkweiler home, recently. The thief gained entrance by forcing a rear window, the lock being broken by a rear window, the lock being broken by a rear window, the lock being broken by a rear window.

President Regards Exclusion Of Japanese Now In Effect

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6.—(By the Associated Press)—The announcement made recently at the White House that President Coolidge favors the principle of Japanese exclusion, was supplemented today by the authorized statement that the president regards exclusion now in effect, under the terms of the gentlemen's agreement with Japan.

Coolidge Says Public Need Not Be Disturbed About Strength Of Navy

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6.—(By the Associated Press)—Allegations of serious deterioration in American naval strength are regarded as generally unfounded by President Coolidge.

The president has considered somewhat exhaustively the question of naval replacement in connection with his recommendations to congress for building new cruisers and submarines and in his endorsement of generous naval appropriations. Through that study he has come to the conclusion that there need be no disturbance in the public mind regarding the navy's comparative strength.

New construction of certain types of vessels is recognized by the president as vitally needed because of the limited period of usefulness of naval ships due to depreciation and changes in armament. Mr. Coolidge, however, feels that the situation is no more alarming than at any other period inasmuch as the navy always, except in case of war is in need of such replacements, are constantly being made.

Pythian Outing At Piketon On June 28

Saturday, June 28, is the date set for the big Pythian outing for Knights in this district, the place of gathering to be the Piketon Fair grounds.

At a meeting of district deputies and lodge workers held in Jackson Monday night, Piketon was selected as the place of meeting after Jackson turned down the outing, when it was decided to hold it on Saturday.

Center's Caves had been suggested as the place for the outing. Piketon quickly grasped the opportunity to have the big meeting there and their invitation was accepted.

The picnic will be an all-day affair with a splendid program of entertainment. At night a special fireworks display will be made. An effort will be made to have the Girls Band and Boys' Band from the K. of C. and B. of E. lodges.

Homes at Springfield and all the Grand Lodge "family" present.

Knights from this city present last night were District Deputy E. A. Stedman of Sciotoville, County Deputy H. Wells Elliott, County Deputy Cameron Justice of Sciotoville lodge, Horace Belmont of Sciotoville and George Fowler, R. G. Johnston of Napoleon lodge.

President's Cat Again In Trouble

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6.—(By the United Press)—"Tiger," President Coolidge's favorite cat is in trouble again. The president named an "X. O. S." call to be sounded over the radio when "Tiger" was lost some time ago. After "Tiger" was found, a handsome collar inscribed with the name and address was put about the distinguished feline's neck. Now, in addition to resuming his prowling, and general trouble making around the White House, the president's cat is in trouble again.

"Tiger" has lost his collar. Provoked, Mr. Coolidge has had "Tiger" placed in a cage along with the other White House cats. "Blackie" for safety keeping during the day. "Tiger" is locked up in the White House billiard parlor.

George Pfeiffer

THE valley was very still. It was sootherly so heavily in snow that the fire was bent. No birds piped, there was no murmur of running water, no evidence of animal life except an occasional wavering line etched into the white by the feet of some tiny rodent. The desolation was complete.

Yet there was life here, for spaced at regular intervals across the gulch were mounds of white, each forming the lips of a rectangular cavity resembling an open grave. They were perfectly aligned and separated from each other by precisely thirty paces; surrounding each was a clearing out of which freshly cut stumps protruded bearing snow caps fashioned like the chapeau of a drum-major. There were six of these holes, and a seventh was in process of digging. Over the last one a crude windlass straddled and the heap of debris at its feet showed raw and dirty against the snow. Out of the aperture a thin vapor rose lazily, coating the drum and rope with time; from the clearing a narrow trail wound to a cabin beside the creek-bank.

McGill came out into the morning and with his three giant mammoths, wolf-gray, shaggy, and silent like their master. He eyed the drooping, white-robed forest and the desolate ridges that shut him in, then said, in a voice harsh from disuse:

"Hello, people! Anything happened yet?"

He made it a practice to speak aloud whenever he thought of it, for the hush of an arctic winter plays pranks with a person's mind, and there is a certain effect of sanity in spoken words, senseless though they be.

He strode toward the prospect hole, the dogs following sedately, their feet making no sound in the snow. They, too, felt the weight of isolation and never left his side.

Arriving at the dump, McGill stood motionless beside the windlass for a long time, staring into nothingness with eyes that were strained and miserable. When the cold bit him he roused himself and addressed the steam-filled opening dispiritedly:

"So, you didn't freeze up on me. That's good. I'll get bed-rock today and show you up for a real cheat. Pay! Bah! there ain't none!"

He descended a ladder at one end of the shaft, gathered the charred logs, tied them into a bundle with the end of the windlass rope, then mounting the ladder, hoisted them to the surface. Next, hooking on the ungainly wooden bucket, he lowered it, after which he descended for a second time.

There began a long and monotonous series of ascents and descents, for every bucket of gravel meant two journeys the full depth of the pit. It was a tedious and primitive process, involving a tremendous waste of effort, but he was methodical, and each time the tub rose it carried a burden sufficient to tax the strength of two men. He handled it easily, however, and by midday had removed the thawed ground and scraped a sample from close to rock. He had a light fire, then took the heaping gold-pail under his arm and set off for his cabin, accompanied by the mammoths.

When he had prepared and eaten his lunch he seated himself before his panning-tub, a square box half filled with water melted from the creek ice, and began the process of testing his prospect.

Having worked down the gravel and sediment to a half-handful, he spread it with a movement of his wrists, leaving stranded at the tail of the black sand a few specks of yellow. "The ore is good for a moment before washing them away."

"Too light—as usual," he said, aloud. The dogs stirred and raised their heads. "Always pretty near, but not quite. But it's here, somewhere, and I'll get it if I can last out this damned season!"

For many weeks—how many McGill neither knew nor cared—he had pursued the routine of his search. He had penetrated this valley alone, every day since then he had labored steadily, mechanically. Spring was coming now, and during this time there had been but two interruptions which had roused him from his apathy. One had occurred when, in quest of fresh meat, he had discovered that he had neighbors ten miles to the west. The other was when a herd of caribou had crossed at that time he had given up his aim to his desire to kill, seeing ahead of his sight the face of the man who had sent him into the wilderness. He could have bagged half the herd, but checked himself in time, realizing that it was not Barclay at whom he leveled his rifle, but a deer whose animal the carcasses of which were useless.

Barclay? The name maddened McGill. Even in his busiest hours memories of Barclay and the woman outlasted themselves.

It was after dark when he had fired the hole a second time and returned to his cabin. He had not reached bed-rock and this fact troubled him—this fact growing very terrible it seemed. Lighting his pipe of rank "sheep-dip" tobacco when the supper-dishes were finally cleaned and the dogs fed, he once more prepared for the fruitless process of panning. But he noticed that this sample of gravel was different to any he had yet found, being of a peculiar ashen color.

He had panned so many samples that all earnestness, all curiosity as to the outcome, had long since disappeared, therefore his movements were purely perfunctory as he dissolved the clay lumps and washed the gravels down. He paused half-way through the operation to fix his hands and relight his pipe, then he was thinking of Barclay and the woman once more, and remained so for a long time. When he resumed his task it was with glazed, unseeing eyes. He was about to dump the last dregs carelessly when something just slipping over the edge of the pan caught his eye and caused him to tilt the receptacle abruptly.

The breath whistling in his throat roused the dogs. McGill closed his eyes for an instant, then re-opened them. A movement of his wrist ran the water across the pan bottom and spread the black sand thinly. Instantly, there leaped out against the black metal a heap of bright, clean, yellow particles which lay as if glued together.

"Course gold! Course gold!" he whispered, then cursed in the weak, meaningless manner of men under great excitement. Not trusting himself to hold the pan, he set it upon the table, but without removing his eyes from it. When his nerves had steadied he ran the prospector down, all the time muttering in his head. He dried it over the fire, blew the iron sand free with his breath, then pushed the particles into a heap, striving to estimate their value.

"There's half an ounce," he said, finally. "Eight dollars a pan! God! That's big! It's another Klondike!"

McGill reached bed-rock next evening and spent most of the night panning the pile of scrapings he had collected from the bottom of the pit. If the top of the streak had been rich, the lower concentration was amazing. Every seam in the shattered limestone, which stood on end like sluice riffles, contained little flattened, pumpkin-seeds of gold. He could see them before the dirt was half washed, but took a sample from the yellow pile grow as the sediment disappeared. A bagging-powder can was half filled when he had finished; it told him unmistakably the magnitude of his riches. He was a wealthy man, wealthier than he had ever dreamed of being; there was more where this came from and the gulch lay unapproached from end to end. Fortune had come in a day, and he would never want so long as he lived.

But what use to make of his discovery he hardly knew, since he had slunk away from the world, alone with hatred for the world, alone with hatred for the fellow-men, intending to live alone for the rest of his days. His grudge was as bitter now as then, and he determined, therefore, to keep his find a secret. That would be a grim, if unsatisfactory, sort of revenge, he reflected. Those strangers to the westward, for instance, would toil and suffer through the long winter, then leave discouraged. There was money here for them and for hundreds—thousands—like them, but he decided to guard his secret and to let it die with him.

McGill pictured the result of this secret. If he gave it out, the stampede, the headlong rush that would bring men from every corner of the North.

"Not Not Not!" He rose and shouted into the empty silence of his cabin. "I won't do it! I won't! I won't!"

But the voices called to him all through the night. He rose early, for they would not let him rest, and during the darkness a terrible hunger had grown upon him. It was the hunger for companionship, for speech.

When he had eaten he pocketed the baking-powder tin, slipped into his snow-shoes and, crossing the gulch, climbed the westward hills that hid his neighbors. The dogs went with him.

News of the John Daniels strike reached McGill in July, when a ragged, unkempt man arrived in a sailing-boat. He was one of the party that had camped west of McGill, and he ate a raw potato with the ravenous appetite of an animal while waiting for his first meal at the Miner's Rest. Between mouthfuls he gave the word that set the town abuzz.

When he had bought a ton of grub at the A. C. store and weighed out payment in bright pumpkin-seed, gold he went to Hopper's saloon and handed the proprietor a folded paper.

Hopper read it uncomprehendingly. "This is a location notice, recorded in my name," the latter said. The stranger nodded. "Number Four Above, on John Daniels Creek. John staked for you, and told me to tell you to come. We've struck it big!"

Hopper's hand shook; he stared at the speaker in bewilderment. "John Daniels? I don't seem to remember him."

"He's a big slab-sided man with a deep voice and eyes like fire." The listener started. "Is he—skookum?"

"Good! It's McGill!"

"I thought so, but I never saw him only once—that was in Circle. He's changed now—got a beard. He said you done him a favor once. You're his friend, ain't you?"

"I am."

"What's the trouble with him?"

"Oh, it was about a woman, of course. It always is. She was no good, except to look at. Folks say Barclay brought her into the country, but Dan didn't know it, so he up and married her. She thought he had money, and when she found he was broke like the rest of us she and Barclay began cutting' up again. It was rotten. I came near putting Barclay away, but I changed my mind. I wouldn't like nobody to do his work, so I told him. He went out to clean the state, but found his wife was crazy about the stunk and always had been, so he sent 'em away together. He done it for her sake, but he warned 'em to stay off his trail, because no camp was his. He was blizzardin' and what did the blame fools do but get caught ten miles below here. 'Course he brought 'em back that night on his sled. McGill was here, right where you're at for a long time. When he resumed his task it was with glazed, unseeing eyes. When he saw Barclay he went after him again, niggerin', I suppose, that God was disgusted with his proposition and had sent the feller back to be finished."

"Good!" said the stranger. "And he got him, eh?"

"Not Barclay wasn't more'n half dead, and the woman fell to begging for his life again. She appealed to all of us. McGill must have loved her more'n we give him credit for, because when he saw that neither one of 'em was able to leave, he left instead. He walked right out of that door into the wickedest storm we had that season, and we never seen him again. Everybody thought he froze or the wolves got him. That was a year ago last winter."

"What become of the woman?"

"Oh, her and Barclay left for Dawson on the first boat. I guess they saw we didn't 'em here."

"And Barclay? Didn't nobody offer to bump him off?" The ragged stranger was incredulous.

"No, we just left him and the woman alone. Most of us was kind of sorry for him, but we didn't say so."

"Well, Hopper hesitated. "I don't think she exactly understood what she was doin'. You know the first winter up here is hard on tenderfeet, especially women. Most of 'em are mighty queer before they come down. She'd have come to herself if McGill had given her time."

"Him—! It's too late now." Both men nodded. "When 'll you leave for John Daniels Creek?"

"When? Now! I've got enough of this camp, and I'll have these bar-fetters packed in two hours."

McGill—or John Daniels, as he expected to find a change, but he was unprepared for the startling transformation that greeted his eyes.

Of course the news of his return spread swiftly, for he was a personage, but before the curious could mark him he had left for the creek that bore his name, where a hundred men were preparing to drift out Discovery pay-streak under his supervision. He remained there a month. Then one day he decided to go to town. He was curious to examine this town of his at closer range.

It was worth seeing, he decided proudly, during his inspection; it was a splendid, healthy camp. He walked the front street, then prowled through the regions behind. There were women in his part of Arcadia, and these he regarded distrustfully, although he was more than once arrested by a glimpse of some cozy home, and stood staring until warned by the frowns of indignant housewives that his presence was suspicious.

In the course of his wanderings, however, he came into a different district, one which offended him sorely. Immediately behind the saloons he found a considerable cluster of menial shacks which were inhabited by women and yet which were not homes. Until this moment he had regarded Arcadia with fatherly pride, and had not dreamed it was wicked, hence this discovery enraged him.

And then, as if to point the comparison, he saw a child, a tiny, fat, round-faced person leading a puppy by a string.

Now, women were strange to John Daniels, but children were mysterious, incomprehensible creatures. He had never touched one, with the possible exception of an Indian papoose, now and then, therefore his present meeting constituted an experience—almost an adventure. It was a white child, too, and he gazed at him with the disconcerting calmness of a full-grown person. Daniels was both embarrassed and shocked at his presence in this locality. He hesitated, then summoned his courage and said, timidly:

"Say, kid, ain't you lost?"

The child continued to stare at him in unaffected wonder.

"Fine dog-team you're driving, sonny!" Daniels smiled, congratulating himself upon an admirable display of wit, only to realize with a start that he had made a mistake. Some sixth sense informed him that this was not a boy.

"So, mister, you—you don't belong here. You're plumb off your trail. That's a cinch!"

She was a ridiculous fur parka, scarcely larger than Daniels's cap, and tiny moccasins that made her legs look shorter and fatter than they were. Her mittens were the bluest things he had ever seen and when she regarded them wonderingly he was amazed by her approach and laying one in his hand.

Now, this frank and full declaration of friendship reduced Daniels to a helpless condition; he had never been more troubled in his life. He was half minded to withdraw his hand from his glove and retreat, leaving it in her possession, but thought again of these evil surroundings, and of the responsibility that had devolved upon him with her surrender. In the midst of his dumbness the young lady burst into a bubbling and intimate recital of her adventures, which doubtless would have been perfectly intelligible to her mother, but which left the discoverer of John Daniels Creek floundering for a moment.

He recalled his disgraceful ignorance by an easy assumption of understanding.

Having finished her recital the tot burst into a funny gurgle which plainly established a deep and undying intimacy between them, then, all maidens who have pledged their affections, she made plain her readiness to accompany her protector to the end of the world. The three went slowly out of that shabby place, the man dazed and delighted, the child loquacious and trustful.

Daniels derived a preposterous delight from this experience, until he realized that they were wandering aimlessly. Then thoughts of a possible encounter with a distracted parent filled him with such dismay that he appealed to the first woman he met.

"Lady! If you know where this baby lives—"

"Certainly I know."

"Then take her home. Her mother 'll think I'm a kidnapper."

The woman laughingly accepted the responsibility of a full explanation, but as she lifted the child it turned up its face to Daniels, quite as a matter of course. The rosy lips awaited him, yet he did not understand. He inquired, blankly:

"Now what does she want?"

"A kiss. Don't you dearie?"

"God! Inghit!" breathed the man. Then he lowered his bearded face. He was trembling when the strangers had gone; he felt those moist baby lips against his and the sensation almost overcame him.

"Well! I want to talk to you. Come with me for a minute."

He yielded to her imploring eyes and followed grudgingly down the back stairs and into the night, wondering the while at his own weakness. She led the way, bareheaded, heedless of the cold. They were in that ill-favored district he had penetrated earlier in the day. She paused finally, frowning at the door of one miserable structure, whereupon he growled:

"You live here? You're worse than—"

"Sh-h!" She laid a finger on her lips as she led him in and lit a lamp, then she beckoned him toward the staid rear room.

The surprise of what he saw struck McGill dumb, for there in a crib lay the tiny lass who had befriended him that afternoon. Her lips were pouting sweetly, her face was flushed with dreams, one plump little arm was outstretched toward the floor, and just below the doubled fist McGill saw the deep dimpled bracelet of babyhood. Her presence made of these squalid surroundings a place of purity; the room became suddenly a shrine.

"She's son-of-a-gun!" said McGill. Inwardly, then his face darkened once more. "I know her," he announced, grimly. "What are you doing with that kid—in this hell-hole?"

"Why, she's mine—my baby. We have no other home. Now you see why I must leave Barclay, and—"

"Your baby!"

"Barclay won't let me run straight. I've always wanted to, and now I must, for the baby's sake." When this brought no response she continued, with growing intensity, but in lowered tones:

"She'll begin to understand things before long. She'll hear about him—and me. Then what? I'm decent, inside, McGill. Honestly I am, and I've paid for what I did! And I'll pay more, if I have to, but she mustn't be part of the price. No! You've got to help me. Don't you see?"

She mistook his gesture of bewilderment for one of refusal, then hurried to one final, frenzied appeal, although at a fearful cost to herself.

"Listen! She wouldn't stay with me, even if I got away; it wouldn't be good for her; besides, Barclay would find us some time; or, if he didn't, I'm too sick to last much longer. Then she'd be alone. You're rich, McGill. You'll have to take her—not for my sake, understand, but—"

"I?" The man started. "I take Barclay's baby? Great God!"

There was a moment of silence during which the wife strove to steady herself, then she said:

"She's not his—she's yours—ours."

McGill uttered a great cry. He swung ponderously toward the rear room, then fell to trembling so that he could not proceed. He stared at the woman, lifted his hands, then dropped them; his lips shook.

"My—baby!" he whispered, while he felt something melt within him and was filled with such an agony of joy that he sobbed with the agony of it.

His wife's punishment overflooded when he breathed, fiercely.

"Then give her to me. You can't keep her. You can't touch her. You ain't fit."

She bowed her head in assent, although his torture was nothing as compared with hers.

"You'll help me get away from Barclay, won't you?" she asked, supporting herself unsteadily.

"Barclay? I forgot him! He's the one that did all this, ain't he? He brought you to this, and my baby, too. He made her live among women like these. He raised her in slime—" He went out, closing the door softly.

Barclay was dealing "bank" in one of the saloons when McGill entered and came toward him down the full length of the room. They recognized each other as their eyes met, and the former got back stiffly in his chair, feeling that the dead had risen. What he saw written in the face of the bearded man drove the blood from his cheeks, for it was something he had dreamed in his dreams.

None of those present told the same tale of what immediately followed, but the stories agreed in this, that John Daniels neither hesitated nor quickened his approach, although Barclay emptied his gun so swiftly that the echoes blended, then snapped in on a spent cartridge as the two clutched.

Now McGill—or Daniels, as he was known to the onlookers—never armed, having yet to feel the need of other weapons than his hands. He tore the gun from his victim's grasp, then snatched him with it so fearfully that men shouted at him and hid their faces. Meanwhile he was speaking, growling something into Barclay's ears. No one understood what it was he said until the confusion died and they heard these words:

"You can't stay in Arcadia, McGill. Neither am I!"

"You can't stay in Arcadia, McGill. Neither am I!"

"You can't stay in Arcadia, McGill. Neither am I!"

"You can't stay in Arcadia, McGill. Neither am I!"

"You can't stay in Arcadia, McGill. Neither am I!"

"You can't stay in Arcadia, McGill. Neither am I!"

"You can't stay in Arcadia, McGill. Neither am I!"

neither of you. I got out of Ophir and let you alone, but this is my town; I can't leave it."

"Well go," she cried, wringing her hands; "anyhow, I'll go, if you'll help me. But I'll need help! Oh, God! Yes, I'll need help! You don't know—You and he can settle things afterward."

"You want to leave him?"

"I've tried to break away. I've been trying ever since that first day in Ophir, but he won't let me. He's trying—and I learned better; now I'm afraid. He's broken me, Dan, but you'll help me to leave him, won't you?"

After a time the husband answered, more to himself than to her: "I guess I'm even with you, anyhow. You've gone to hell, him in hand with him. I won't interfere—not that way."

His wife had seen a way to freedom and clutched at it with desperate persistence.

"Listen! I want to talk to you. Come with me for a minute."

He yielded to her imploring eyes and followed grudgingly down the back stairs and into the night, wondering the while at his own weakness. She led the way, bareheaded, heedless of the cold. "She'll begin to understand things before long. She'll hear about him—and me. Then what? I'm decent, inside, McGill. Honestly I am, and I've paid for what I did! And I'll pay more, if I have to, but she mustn't be part of the price. No! You've got to help me. Don't you see?"

She mistook his gesture of bewilderment for one of refusal, then hurried to one final, frenzied appeal, although at a fearful cost to herself.

"Listen! She wouldn't stay with me, even if I got away; it wouldn't be good for her; besides, Barclay would find us some time; or, if he didn't, I'm too sick to last much longer. Then she'd be alone. You're rich, McGill. You'll have to take her—not for my sake, understand, but—"

If at first you don't succeed, try again. It was a wise guy that pulled that one. In other words it means don't get discouraged and quit if you fail to away to a good start. I came to the majors as a pitcher and didn't meet with much success. I was unable to get the ball over. Being fleet of foot enabled me to get a chance in the outfield. I soon developed proficiency as a fielder, but couldn't hit, and the general opinion seemed to be that I never would.

Constant practice enabled me to do fairly well against the right handers, but being a left-handed hitter I was feeble against southpaw pitching. Because of that fault, for a time I was allowed to play only when a right hander worked for the opposition. That didn't please me and I worked to overcome my weakness against left handers. It was a hard battle but I finally won out and now hit both styles of pitching fairly well. My message is, don't get discouraged. If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.

QUESTIONS
"What are the rights of the base runner to advance on an infield fly?"
"Does a base runner, after crossing first base, and then making a back for second, forfeit his right to return to first without liability to be put out?"

ANSWERS
1. A base runner can now advance on an infield fly, just as on any other fly ball that is caught or muffed.
2. A base runner, after crossing first base, and making an attempt to go to second, immediately forfeits his right to return to first without liability to be put out.
3. He can make such a turn on either fair or foul territory, provided he makes no attempt to go to second.

Mr. James H. Allen of Rochester, N. ### A SUSPICIOUS DISCOVERY

It is singular, even suspicious, that just as congress is approaching a vote on the proposition to transfer Muscle Shoals to private ownership, the announcement is made that scientists have made a discovery that makes the illimitable powers the Shoals would generate a great waste, if applied to the manufacture of nitrogen.

In other words, with this discovery in operation, great force is not an essential to extracting the vital fertilizer ingredient from the air. Each farmer may become his own manufacturer. All that it will be required for him to set up in nitrogen production will be a modest steam boiler and a few contraptions. If he sets it going when he rises with the chickens in the morning, there will be a wagon load of nitrogen ready for him to haul out in the field by the time his breakfast is finished and by the time he gets that spread there will be another load waiting.

And thus is another complexity entered into the matter of the Muscle Shoals project. First originated as a war measure, on a scale that up to that time, would have amazed mankind, Muscle Shoals has become a seething whirlpool of contention and many men, reaching even up to the president of the United States, have been involved therein, while those who would serve government and those who would promote big business are seen tossing therein.

It is a problem over which statesmen and patriots may well contend as to whether or not the power that may be developed at this particular point in the Tennessee river should remain with the government or be given over to private hands. As things go private hands will eventually acquire it. In an inward realization of that culmination the public would much prefer it be turned over to Henry Ford. In that view, however, it should accept the fact that Henry Ford isn't going to live forever, nor yet for many years, as age is rapidly encroaching upon him.

A GREAT BLESSING

READING about the catastrophic hurricane that swept over the regions to the southeast, one can not repress a feeling of gratification, even if not one of gratitude, to "him who rides on the storm," that this immediate section of the Ohio Valley has ever been exempt from such terrible visitation.

The eternal hills buttress us about and so far they have been the faithful bulwarks that have held us generally exempt from the destructive power of the Storm King.

But can these mighty elevations always be our impregnable defence? That is questionable. Some day the Valley, as visioned, Saturday, by a lively writer in the Ironsonian, when "Iron-yn becomes the pulsing heart of a vast industrial district," may not atmospheric conditions be changed and our defences disregarded, if not actually swept away.

Scientists tell us that storms are formed by pools of hot air forming over a given area. This air being more impalpable, or in a sense lighter than cold air, which presses against it, is set in motion in ratio to the pressure exerted upon it and so the velocity with which the air travels for the particular time is determined; though direction and momentum are directed in a degree by the earth's rotary motion.

Because of the great extremes in temperature, tropical and polar regions develop the most violent storms. Wherefore we speculate that when these "countless smoke stacks" begin to belch over the valley a different climatic condition will be created through increased torridity and may be a cyclone will come sweeping up the valley, desolating and destroying all in its path. That, however, is some distance off, it is but a crude theory anyway.

May it be sufficient, nevertheless, to quicken our hearts to beat in sympathy with our neighbors and our brothers.

He hasn't opened his mouth since last Tuesday, but we wonder if when he does, Hi Johnson will still maintain he has a chance to be nominated for president?

Those Ohio delegates that Manager Dave Rockwell claimed for his man McAdoo, the morning after election, seem to have got lost in the shuffle.

The main point we see in Washington political news, is that most of it isn't so, leastwise the next day denials come with regularity.

Never can let a good thing work along unmolested. Now they are telling that all sorts of critical obstacles lie in the path of that universal panacea, the Dawes commission report.

Our whilom idol, David Lloyd George has taken to viewing all things with alarm. Always noticed that was an affliction that always attacked a fellow with great violence immediately on his forced retirement from a public job.

NEW YORK DAY-BY-DAY

BY O. O. MCINTYRE

NEW YORK, May 6.—What becomes of discarded movie stars? Four who flashed across the screen as headliners a few years ago are now hostesses in New York supper clubs. Just as the prize-fighter whose punch has failed used to turn to saloonkeeping, so apparently does the ex-movie queen turn to cabaret hostessing.

It is a come-down, to be sure. They must face life as it is lived and not as it appears on the inselens Xmas card. Where once they were protected from sharp contacts by producers, they must now face who finished and loose-tongued rosters who have the roke off for the night.

As a general thing the movie star whose glamour has faded has not had the experience on the legitimate stage that would entitle her to chatter parts or to leading ladyship with stock companies. Without her director she is indeed out of the picture.

It is an odd occupation—this supper club hostess job. Promoting bigger checks is the chief requisite. They fill from table to table making small talk and accepting rather than making delicate inquiries. It requires tact not to offend.

While the pay is good it does not compare with film earnings. The average salary for the hostess is $100 a week, with a percentage of the drink sale. During the day they must whip up trade by phoning patrons and inviting them to drop in.

Also they must arrange "special events"—moving picture nights, stage nights and the like. They depend largely on former acquaintances to help fill the tables. One of the inelastic rules of the management is that hostesses shall not drink on duty.

Waiters attend to that. What looks to the buying patron as though it might be a potent concoction is something innocuous. The movie industry is in its infancy—so they say—so it is not yet time to chronicle. After the supper club hostessing, what?

In a churchyard far up on Riverside Drive is a marble slab on which was chiseled many years ago: "Far from worldly turmoil, he rests." As one reads, there is the din of steam riveters on a half-score of apartment houses being erected nearby.

Today I was lost in New York, three blocks from my home. Let those who have the idea I am a city slicker fool around with that one for awhile. I was completely bewildered for 25 minutes. It took two policemen and a newsboy to help me get my bearings. It happened like this. I came up from Brooklyn Bridge on the subway and alighted at Grand Central, a stone's throw from my hotel. I followed a green line for awhile and found myself in Times Square, then I followed a black line and got mixed up in the labyrinthine depths of the mystic maze. It became more and more bewildering. One policeman told me to go this way another that I finally gave a newsboy a dime to get me to the street. Each day brings added conviction this city is no place for a Plattsburg boy.

The greatest distance from New York City Hall to a point within the municipal limits is to Tottenville, Staten Island—nineteen miles in a straight line.

The most bewildering thing about New York to me is the difference between the world that swirls around Forty-Second Street and the world that bubbles around Brooklyn Bridge. Coming out of the subway at the bridge the people seem different. The shops are different. Even the newsboys have a different pitch to their voices. There are thousands of men and women downtown who do not get uptown in a year's time. They work downtown and live in Brooklyn or Staten Island.

TO A WOOD VIOLET

In this secluded shrine
O miracle of grace,
No mortal eye but mine
Hath looked upon thy face.

No shadow but mine own,
Hath screened thee from the sight
Of Heaven, whose love alone
Hath led me to thy light.

Whereof—as shade to shade
Is added in the sun—
A moment's glance hath made
Our souls forever one.

—John Banister Tabb.

You Don't Say

"Why, no, I hadn't noticed the slightest resemblance between them."

A Fair Offer

Casser: "If ye can prove me guilty, I'm ope nto conviction."

Nouveau Riche—But, hang it, I haven't got a daughter.

Hard-Up Young Man—Good heavens! They told me you had—London Opinion.

A Genuine Surprise

"How did your speech come out?" asked Mr. Meekton.
"I was annoyed," replied his wife. "A man went to sleep while I was talking."

"Great heaven, Henrietta! I didn't think such a thing was possible."—Washington Star.

Correction

"Binks says his girl gave him a vacant stare."
"That was her father. It was his kick that made the stare vacant."

Under Suspicion

Several members of a women's club were chatting with a little daughter of their hostess.

"I suppose you're a great help to your mother," suggested one.
"Oh, yes," replied the youngster. "And so is Ethel, but today it's my turn to count the spoons after the company has gone."

War's Aftermath

A nosy old chap, in a field of debris, spied a shell. It was dead—it must be—
So he kicked at the thing, for he wanted to sls.

A few minutes later—it seemed hours to him—
We found here a leg—further on found a kns—
But it couldn't be pored that it really was his!

Gault: "Well, it certainly has had its ups and downs."

Due

Gmshista: "No. The doctor says I have two more payments to make."

Hurray for Dad

He thought it safer to write to the girl's father, asking for her hand. He was an ardent lover, but a poor speller, and his note ran: "I want your daughter—the floor of your family." "The floor of the family is good," replied the old man. "and you sure it isn't my dough you're after?"
